

Muddlin' Along for April 12

From: Ian STEWART iandalestew@shaw.ca

Received: Sat 2015-04-11 7:51 PM

Andrew and I were out on Green Lake for a couple of hours on Saturday afternoon. The weather sounded like it was going to be awful but we lucked out with some sunny breaks and a lull in the gusty winds which finally came up again around 4 PM and drove us off the lake.

The fish were hitting steady the whole time we were there with far more LDR's than fish to the net. We did manage to bring over a dozen to the net however and we both kept a few for supper. The two I ate were excellent . . . much better than the ones I kept out of Diver at this time last year.

They were hitting Andrew's emerger steady, but not hooking up very well. I used a purple micro leech with good success getting the two largest fish to the boat with it. The booby flies were getting lots of good strikes, but most of the fish did not hook up. I think they weren't really biting as enthusiastically as they might have earlier in the day. In one of the lulls, there was lots of surface activity in the bay east of the launch, but by the time I rigged up a dry fly, the wind came up again and it was all over!

We are both looking forward to the trip to Kissinger next week and will be heading over together on Friday morning.

Supper! Two fat 12 inch rainbows from Green Lake

The weather cooperated part of the time